JUNIORS

OFFICERS

MOTTO: "Not Yet But Soon."
COLORS: Green and White.

John Charles Johnson, Missoula, Montana.

He is the kind of a man that would make a "political boss." He could pull the wires, divide the spoils and be overloaded with popularity. On the side he is an Engineer.

LUCILE MARSHALL. Missoula, Montana.

A literary genius who scatters pearls in all directions. She early distinguished herself as an active worker and we are proud of her. Look over this book and see evidences of her artistje finishing touch.

MAJORIE LEE ROSS. Missoula, Montana,

The Queen of the Carnival and the Belle of the Ball. Majorie has the happy faculty of smilling. She smiles herself into public favor. Just observe the above "fac-simile" and beconvinced that she has the smile that won't come off.

ERNEST E. HUBERT. Missoula, Montana,

He makes up for lost fime in a most dazzling manner. He is going to let his hair grow and wear a velvet "Tam" and a sash tie. After showing his ability as referee in the Tug-of-War we would recommend him to all Suffragette meetings in the same cancelly.

Annabelle Robertson. Hamilton, Montana.

We pride ourselves on her beauty for she is one of our fairest. Her dancing! Her aim is to settle down to the simple life of married bliss after an eventful career in college.

DeWitt Cregier Warren. Chicago, Illinois.

Here, ladies and gentlemen, is our orator. In fact, he is a hair trigger proposition, since on the slightest provocation, he "orates" with the greatest facility. This commendable trait, he brought with him from the "city", and the "wild and woolly West" seems only to increase its tenacity. He has great and fond hopes for the law as a profession. Proud will be the day, when he may enter the bar, for in his estimation it is the most lucrative of all those who raketh in the Almighty Dollar, Here endeth the first chapter for Who's Who.

ISMA CAROLINE EIDELL. Helena, Montana.

Attention!

Our up-to-date Lochinvar is come out from the Fort,

Thro' all the town his cycle is the best of the sort,

And save for his love, excuse he had none

But I'll whistle my love when I come to the Dorm

So skillful in love and shiftless in war,

We've never had a cyclist like this up-to-date Lochinvar?

WILLIE CLANTON. Billings, Montana.

She spent her youth, chasing frogs in the swamps in the vicinity of the Sugar City, until she grew old enough to come to the U. of M. and dissect these frogs for the benefaction of science.

MILLARD SIDNEY BULLERDICK. Sheridan, Montana.

Here is the marvel of the age. He is a veritable compound man. He runs, he orates, he debates, and studies, and lastly he observes and philosophizes. He is a Son of Destiny, check his name for you will hear of him some day. He has astounding schemes of evangelizing the varsity. Watch out?

FLORENCE H. AVERILL. Townsend, Montana.

Up and coming, always awake One of the well known Bi-Chloride Twins. Do you remember "Ma Perkins" at the fancy dress ball? Dared to write a paper like Miss De Ryke.

GEORGE HARVEY SPENCER. White Sulphur Springs, Montana.

He is a model of dignity and propriety and wouldn't do a naughty thing under any circumstances. Nuff Sed.

Eva Coffee. Missoula, Montana.

Never idle a single moment but thrifty and thoughtful of others. She is a Junior and makes being a Junior worth while,

RALPH WALLACE SMITH. Missoula, Montana.

Noted or notorious, you may take your choice. He is noted in the engineering department, otherwise among the Lits. Smith and his coterie will make for the M. E. the name they deserve. He is a born leader and the next thing you hear of him he will be unionizing the M. E. of the world. Hooray, we are proud of aim.

Margaret Mary Lucy. Missoula, Montana.

She has a quiet reserve and a poise so to speak, but behind it all she is the impersonation of jollity; if you really know her.

CHARLES STUART McCowan. Great Falls, Montana.

Busy! Busy! Busy!! Boost! Boost! Boost!! He hoes his own row and then hoes around the patch. He has no favorite diet, but has grown and waxed fat on all of them.

EDITH MARY STEELE, Billings, Montana.

Zoology and amorology have been Edith's special courses. Campustry and forestry are her majors while she expects to devote special effort to her thesis on the "Flora and fauna of Uncle Sam's forest reserves." She is known to have taken special interest in one of the species of the genus "Forest Ranger." This particular specimen has meandering habits hanging around the "Dorm" in the winter time and hibernating in the mountains, especially the reserves, during the summer time.

GLADYS ANN McLean. Anaconda, Montana.

Here we have a real student in Gladys. She never shirks a duty or cuts a class or fails a test. The pride of Anaconda. But oh; those eyes!

William A. Bennett. Anaconda, Montana.

He has distinguished himself as the manipulator of steering gears. He never misses a lampost or a curbstone and even talks "Automobilia" in his sleep. He is also a promoter and as she once said, he was a youth of some promise, but in what?

ABBIE CATHERINE LUCY. Missoula, Montana.

It may be hard to get acquainted with Abbie, but it is certainly worth while for behind her reserve is a fun loving spirit.

HARRY DAVID MACLAY. Lo Lo, Montana.

Hoot! Mon! Of the clan Maclay, of which we have many, H. D. has the brightest prospects. Just look at him! He boards at the Dorm, That cadaverous look he carries around, when he isn't smiling. To Slim, there are only two things worth talking about, but that doesn't count the "Muff" down in Orchard Homes. He is preeminently an engineer, to be explicit, the Mechanical Steam Engineer. And also he is Mechanical Steam Football player. He was born the part, acts the part and plays the part. Cap is a jolly good fellow. Just ask Hoffman.

Mary Hanson. Missoula, Montana.

Great bugs, small bugs, lean bugs, fat bugs; in fact any old bug fascinates Mary. She is one of the main stays of the Science Association and can forecast anything new in Science long before its publication.

CHARLES HENRY HOFFMAN, Glasgow, Montana.

We Engineers like to sit beside him in Math, tests where we can help him. His one remaining aim in college is to be a steady caller at the Dorm.

ETHEL GRACE HUGHES. Missoula, Montana.

Ethel has resolved to be a Prima Donna. Her career so far has amply justified such a resolution.

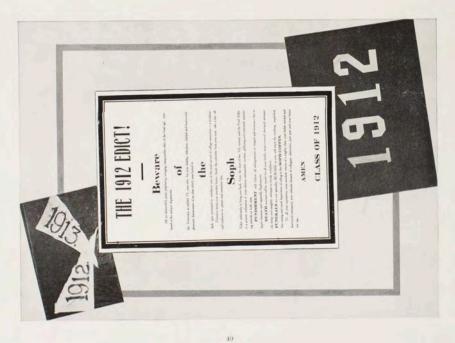

FRANK ELLIOTT GLEASON.
Florence, Montana.

Give thoughtful attention to this man for he is a real Bitter Rooter. Frank is an engineer of good promise. He also plays football.

MAUDE BROOKS McCullough. Missoula, Montana.

Here is another Junior warbler. She has met with much success in dramatics. That explains her popu-

A procession will be formed by all the eligible braves in the tribe, bedecked in full feathers and war paint, with the Freshy Prex tied and guarded by six of the braves in charge of the Chief of the Braves. Noise is a necessary adjunct to the whole "stuat", so that tom-tom beaters will be there in plenty. The other various and motley array of chiefs will lead the procession, circling the football field. There the exercises for the evening will be held. A long and interesting code of ceremonies has been prepared and will be acted out on the scalping grounds.

Spring Song

A murmur as from countless tiny throats Persistent sounds, but all so soft and low I scarce can hear it. I but feel and guess It is the voice of things that live and grow; The voice of silent things, dumb teeming life That thrills and quickens in the earth below.

Above this subtle music, stronger chords
Make harmonies. The meadow lark's refrain
Alluring sweet is trilled; the robin's call
Sounds gaily with the killdee's minor strain.
The world is full of music, piercing sweet,
So perfect that its joy is almost pain.

The great gold sun rides high in depths of blue, A gracious monarch he, who rules alone All life, and draws from it the harmonies— Strange subtle melodies of every tone. The music of the growing grass and trees He makes, and all the bird songs are his own.

Adorer of the sun am I, and so A little of his music I would sing A little add to all this harmony. This music of each living, growing thing. Dear mother earth, let me rejoice with you, For life is good. Behold it is the spring.

MONTANA BUSWELL, '09.

THE SQUARE THING

"Frances," called her father, "the carriage is waiting."

"Yes, I'm coming," answered a clear voice from the back part of the house.

Mr. Ward looked up from his newspaper to see a small avalanche descending upon him. The impending misfortune did not look very formidable, however. It resolved itself into a young girl of perhaps eighteen, in a brown suit, with hat and furs of the same shade, and with brown eyes that utterly shamed them all. Instead of haring brown hair, such as nature intends to go with brown eyes, Frances had a lustrous black; this was only one of the many ways in which she defied conventionality. Her vivid coloring and the dimple that played high on one cheek gave an indescribable vivace to her face, which the demure eyes only heightened, instead of lessening.

Frances clasped her arms tightly around his neck, and he held her close to him for a moment. Then resting his hands upon her shoulders he said seriously:

"You know, Frances, that I have always been proud of your fine sense of honor. You are like your sainted mother in that respect, and I want you to grow to be as fine a woman as she was. I won't ask you to win honors in your lessons or in music, I will say nothing about the number of dances you go to, or the money you spend; I only ask one thing of you."
"What is that, father?"

"That you always do the square thing. It may not be easy, sometimes it will be very hard; but I want to know that I can depend on my little daughter to do the square thing under all circumstances. Then I will be content."

"I will, father," she answered tremulously, "You can trust me."

In half an hour Frances was flying along on the train that was to take her to her first year of college. Looking out of the window with unseeing eyes, she wondered what college would be like. Who was going to be her roommate, and would the girls like her, or would she be lonely? She hoped she would get to go to the first dance. She smiled as she thought of the sign that her chum had given her to hang in her new room:

"Of all sad words of tongue or pen,

The saddest are these: can't do without men."

Then her brown eyes became serious as she thought of her father.

"I'm all he has left, now that mother is gone," she whispered to herself, "and I must not disappoint him. Oh, I will be strong! I will do the square thing!"

It was three months later, Frances was kneeling on the floor beside the open window, resting her arms on the sill, and looking out into the night. Her room was dark, save for the occasional glance of a stray moonbeam. The campus was quite still. Suddenly the chug-chug of a machine stabbed the silence, and the powerful eyec of the car peered through the trees down by the gate. Swiftly, smoothly the machine shot around the driveway and stoped at the door of the Hall. The siren shrilled forth its imperative summons, and in answer a window was raised on the second floor, and a girlish voice called, "All right!"

In a few minutes a merry crowd of girls ran down the steps, laughing and talking, and piled into the car; all but one, which Frances recognized as her roommate.

"Marie, come and sit with me", called one of the girls.

"No, she's going to sit in this seat", chimed out three others.

"You're all stung," she cried gaily, and sprang into the front seat beside the driver.

The engine throbbed and the machine glided away into the blackness.

"Oh," murmured the girl in the window, "I can't stand it, I can't! I can't give her up! She is mine!" and the tears which had been welling up in her heart and throat all the day, now had their way.

In a little while the sobs ceased and she became calmer. Her thoughts drifted back to the past months and found comfort in the recollections of the old happy days. What queer fate had placed Marie and she together as roommates! They had never seen each other before they came to college, and yet in one short week they became such friends as one rarely sees. How congenial they had been from the very first! Neither one ever appeared without the other; they attended classes together, went every where with each other. The girls in the school had jokingly called them "the inseparables", and so they were. There had not been a flaw in their friendship, in all those months of constant companionship, until the last week, when the rushing for the two sprorities had begun. Then for the first time, Frances had known what it was like to be left at home alone, while Marie went out.

It had all be so strange, sitting alone in the room without Marie; Frances remembered how she had tried to fix her mind on her lessons, had started to do a hundred things; but she could not banish that adorable roguish face which seemed to peep at her from every corner of the room. Sometimes the vision smiled and called her "Francie", which had been Marie's pet name for her roommate; again it looked sadly serious, and the blue eyes seemed to say, "I am going away, dear, I am going into a land where you will be a barbarian."

At the thought of that, Frances buried her head on her folded arms, in silent anguish. The cool night breeze stirred the curtains and fanned her cheek gently. The moon slipped from behind its cloudy veil and shed a kindly radiance over the dusky head as if to hear its burden.

The next day, after helping Marie dress for a matinee party to be given by Omicom Phi, the sorority that was rushing her, Frances took a couple of pillows and a book, went out across the campus, and sat down in the shade behind a hedge. After reading for an hour or so, she fell asleep, and late in the afternoon she was awakened by the sound of voices on the other side of the hedge.

Yawning drowisly, she wondered whose they were; her sleepiness, however, overcame her curiosity and she was just on the edge of the land of dreams again, when she heard Marie Van Eman's name mentioned. She sat up with a start to hear what was being said about her roommate.

"All the girls want her;" a voice went on, "I haven't heard anyone say word against her personally. Didn't she look darling at the matinee, this afternoon, in that comflower dress?"

Like a flash Frances understood who was talking. It was Cynthia Alen, a member of the sorority that had given the theatre party, which must be all over by now. She listened eagerly for the other voice.

"Yes, I never saw Marie look prettier, although of course she can't compare with Frances Ward as to real beauty."

That person, on the other side of the hedge, blushed with delighted surprise, as she recognized the voice of Aline Stewart, a girl whom she thought had disliked her.

"But of course we can't pledge Marie," Cynthia continued, "with that disgrace in her family."

"Oh, you mean about her brother?" said Aline. "It seems a shame, when we all wan her so much, to think that she has to be kept out of Omicron Phi by something that is not her fault."

"Yes, it does," agreed Cynthia, "but if we don't take her, most of the girls want to pledge Frances Ward in her place. We can't take both; it has to be either Marie or Frances. Let's go in to dinner."

As the voices died away, Frances realized what she had done. She had eavesdropped! In her eagerness as to what they were going to say about Marie, she had listened to what was not meant for her ears. A burning shame overspread her face. Then she fell to thinking over what they had said. What was that about disgrace in Marie's family? Marie had no brother, Frances knew. What could they have meant?

Suddenly she understood. Marie had told her one time, as a joke, of an incident that happened when Mr. and Mrs. Van Eman and Marie were spending a few days in a little country town. They had left early one morning, and while on the way to the train, had heard that the safe in the hotel where they had stayed had been robbed of several hundred dollars during the night. Beyond feeling glad that none of them had put anything in the safe, they never gave the matter another thought. A few days afterward, however, Mr. Van Eman happened to pick up a newspaper, in which a detailed account of the robbery was published. The thief had been caught, and gave his name Arthur Van Eman. As he was a young man and apparently well educated everyone immediately decided that he was a son of Mr. Van Eman, "a gentleman, who with his wife and daughter had spent several days at the hotel, and had left early in the morning, the night after the robbery was committed," to use the words of the paper. It went on to say that suspicion pointed very strongly to the Van Eman family, and that every effort would be made to trace them.

The idea was so ridiculous that Mr. Van Eman just laughed and showed the paper to his wife and Marie. As they were leaving in a few hours for New York, he did not even take the trouble to deny the report, and the incident was forgotten.

Frances wondered how the sorority girls had ever heard of it.

"What an absurd tale to believe," she said to herself. "The idea that Marie would have a brother that was a criminal!"

The girls did believe it was true however, and what was more, if they didn't find out differently they were going to pledge her, -Frances Ward!

It was not until then that the full enormity of what she had heard burst upon her. It rested with her whether Marie would be pledged to Omicron Phi or not, for she alone knew the facts about the so-called disgrace in Marie's family, and if she kept silent, what would the result be? They could go back to the old happy times, the days of close friendship again. They would still be roommates, for even if she were pledged, Frances resolved that she would not go to live in the sorority house that was being built on the hill. She would stay with Marie.

"And if I weren't pledged," she told herself, "what matter? Marie and I would still have each other, and I would rather be a barbarian with her than an Omicron Phi without her. She laughed happily, and went in to dinner.

That evening, when Frances was walking around the campus with some of the girls, one of them exclaimed:

"Ch, I have a T. L. for you, Frances. One of the girls said you were the squarest girl that she ever knew."

"How lovely!" and Frances blushed with pleasure.

She thought no more about it then, but later when she was writing a letter to her father, the careless remark of the classmate came back to her. She stopped for a moment. Was she keeping her promise to her father? Yes, she had kept it so far, that was certain, but how about now? With a rush of remorse, Frances realized that she was not doing the square thing by keeping silent as to Marie. The right thing would be to tell the Cmicron Phi girls the truth of the matter. She saw it all plainly now. How could she have been so blind before?

"But it's none of my business," argued something within her. "If the girls had come to me and asked me if it were true, then of course I should have told them so. As it is, I am not supposed to know anything about it."

"That doesn't excuse you from doing what is right," whispered her good angel. "You do know all about the matter, whether you are supposed to or not, and you must tell the Omicron Phi girls for Marie's sake."

Ah, there was the point! If she explained the affair to the girls, they would without a doubt pledge Marie, for had not Cynthia and Aline said so? Then that would be the end of everything; she knew that. Marie would go to live in the Omicron Phi house, for she had as much as told Frances that she would, if she were pledged, and Frances would be left alone.

"Here is your chance," whispered that something within her, which would make itself heard. "You know Marie has been horrid to you the last few weeks. She hasn't done anything outright, but she has hurt you so many times with mean little things. She never hardly talks to you any more. The minute she gets home from some party, she rushes off to one of the other girl's rooms, and never seems to think you like to be told about it."

"Marie is just thoughtless," argued Frances' better self, "She does not mean to be unkind."

"Yes, but she ought to try to help you bear things, and not make it harder for you. Why, even one of the Omicron Phi girls who is rushing her said she was treating you 'rotten', that anyone could see that. Now if you keep quiet about that brotheraffair of hers, no one will ever be the wiser, and everything will be all right."

"Oh, I can't," moaned Frances, "I can't let them go on believing a lie about Marie. And yet how can I give her up?

I love her so!"

Her eyes were misty with unshed tears as she picked up Marie's picture from the dressing table, and looked at it hungrily, silently for a time. Then she whispered ever so softly:

"Do you know what those eyes of yours are asking me to do, darling? They are pleading with me to sign my own death warrant. It sounds funny, doesn't it?" Her voice caught in her throat. She rose unsteadily and went to the door,

"I must tell the Omicron Phi girls now," she murmured, as she turned the knob, "while I have the strength."

Marie was pledged to Omicron Phi late the next afternoon, and Frances went down to dinner alone that night. As she came near the door of the diningroom, she stopped for a moment and leaned against the wall, with her eyes closed.

"Now they will all look me over to see if I have a pledge pin on," she said under her breath. "Oh, the torture of those eyes, the pitying ones as well as the sneering ones! If I only didn't have to go in all alone!"

A burst of gay laughter grated on her ears; she quivered, and then stood bravely erect. The girl who had tried to do the square thing passed into the diningroom.

HAZEL M. LYMAN, '13.

The Commencement

She sat looking out reminiscently, sadly upon the campus below her. Her arms were on the window sill, and her head rested wearily on her clasped hands. The moonlight fell softly on her, and made the tiny tears sparkle as they fell from her long lashes upon her cheek, and rolled down onto the sill. Some of the boldest moonbeams danced past the girl and explored the room behind. Some touched lovingly the roll of white that lay on the table near the window. Others more bold than the first went farther in and danced about the mysterious black heap on the chair. Still others played about the wall, sorrowing that the pictures and pennants were no longer there. The bare walls displeased them, for without pictures, how could they play hide and seek? One group of daring fellows made their way to a far corner where stood a huge trunk. In that they found plenty of recesses for hiding places, and danced mernly among the things heaped upon it.

No sound broke the stillness of the night, save the girl's sigh as she sat looking. Outside, too, the moonbeams were running riot, and the soft summer breeze stirred the leaves of the campus trees. The whole place was lighted by the beautiful mystic light, and the tall trees along the walk threw weird shadows over the grass.

The eyes so heavy with glistening tears contemplated the scene before them. How often before they had looked upon that campus flooded with monolight,—that campus significant of such good times,—that campus from every corner of which jumped old memories to confront her,—that campus that had seen so many hard struggles during her homesick Freshman days.

Off in the far corner rose a tall elm tree, and the gently swaying branches seemed to call her attention to it. "Don't you remember me? I sheltered you that first day so long ago, when you were lonely and homesick, and wanted to leave."

How well she remembered that day! Could it have been four long years before? What a foolish little Freshman she had been! How terribly serious she had taken herself. The smile fought for a moment with the tears, but the tears conquered as the girl remembered that it surely was four years ago, and that all was over.

From another corner—over by the Gym—the dear old Gym—stood a lilac bush heavy with blossoms. The soft scent was gently blown to her by the wind and with it came memory again. There it was—yes, right by that bush, that He had asked her to the first dance. That also, seemed almost too long ago to remember. Still—yes, it was perfectly clear now! She had been so happy, so happy! She had been the first Sopomore to get a "bid".

Again tears dimmed her eyes. The scene became blurred and indistinct and the moonbeams made pearls of the shining drops on her cheeks. Those dear, dear dances! What good times they used to have. And yet—that awful floor. They compared it to sandpaper, she remembered, and finally got so that they knew where the rocky places were. Her eyes turned to the Gym building standing alone in one corner of the campus. The moonlight beams softened the hard lines, and memories became softened too. That physical director! How all important he was. How the girls all hated Gym. It was so much bother, you know, to have to go over there just to play with a dumbell or two. This time smiles conquered tears, and the dimples showed themselves as she thought of the days when the girls had gone over to watch the class basketball games. Those yells that startled the dust in the top of the building. Such clapping when your team made a basket.

Although she could not see it, she knew that just behind the Gym was the football field. There it was that they used to yell—to yell until the very mountain shook. She could see in memory, those figures fighting and running after the ball. How proud the girls always were when the boys made "good", and how they waved the pennants, as the team filed from the field victorious. But those games—she sighed—. No more would football mean to her what it meant then, even tho' she might come back as an alumna, the chief interest would be gone, for would not the boys be gone too? Ah, yes.

The tears were falling fast now, for as she thought of the many happy hours spent in the college, and of the morrow when she would leave it all, her heart failed her. She rose from her sitting position on the floor, and slowly looked around her room. There on the table, thro' the misty film before her eyes, she saw the roll of white tied with her class colors. That simple roll of paper stood for the four years of joy and sorrow, of work and pleasure. Near it lay the black mass of her cap and gown; symbols of Senior dignity, they were. Today was her last day as a Senior. Over in the corner stood the big trush open as tho' waiting for the last things.

Again she turned to the window and stood gazing out, but not comprehending the rare beauty of the scene before her.

Suddenly the clock in the tower began to strike midnight.

"One two—three—," she counted, as the deep notes struck. "Ah." she murmured, "twelve o'clock. It is all over."

No. she was mistaken. All was not over, the clock tolled not the end, but the "Commencement."

LOUISE SMITH, '13.

YESTERDAY

LMOST yesterday it seems to me. I was a college lad, with all the hopefulness of youth before me and not a single care in all the world, yet, what a stretch of years lies between that yesterday of memory and the today of reality. Oh, yes, what a stretch of weary plodding years.

As I write this in the old room of our college days, where many a night I toiled for the success of a tomorrow's lesson, there comes to my ears, borne softly by the evening breeze, the cheery trikling of a mandolin with manly, happy voices carrying the tune of an old song of college days.

Somewhere, close by, a jolly crowd of good fellows is gathered together in heart to heart fraternity and cheer and true good fellowship.

Just a chill comes to my heart, as I realize truly for the first time how very far I have drifted on my course since the old days, and the care free way of living them. For I too, was once the welcome comrade in such a crowd—and I know—I know!

Now it is another song they are singing. "For its always fair weather when good fellows get together with a stein on the table and a good song ringing clear." Those seem to be the words; but after all, what does it matter, words are only words. It is the spirit there—the spirit and the feeling.

I wonder if they realize how much of perfect life they are tasting now, how long it will be ere they again know such sunny golden hours as they are living now. Will they, do you suppose, come back in after years and sit by the open window as I am sitting and hear other men and other voices singing those old songs they once made ring so well, even as I did also and not have come into their hearts something that is heavy and dead, and to their understanding the first keen realization of all that was once theirs? If they be true men I say, they will feel those things and know with tears in their eyes, unashamed as they are in mine.

Just for the time let us suppose that we are united again to be with that old crowd in the dim days. Now we are all together in one of the rooms that made our lounging place then. We will light up our pipes, fellows; this is to be a night of it I am sure.

To you, old man, and you,—what shall I say? We all were to live over the good old days, but I cannot tell of them. I cannot. It seems so clear, so real, but I have not the skill to draw a true picture of feeling, of emotion, of fellowship. We are there again, true! But can one tell of the meaning of the laughter, the way the songs pull at the heart, the manly glance from eye to eye, or the good cheer, the rare good cheer? No! I can realize, I can live again; but I cannot tell; I believe sacred things must be this way. Perhaps it is best; who knows?

But there, the far away tinkling has ceased and the voices and the song died away. The spell is broken. The wind is chill now, just like the days before us. I will gather up these papers and slip away, for there are tearstains upon my cheeks and I must hide them. No one hsall see. I am not ashamed, but they are sacred tonight. What is that!

"For it's always fair"-It's only an echo, that is all.

Review of Athletics

ONTANA opened the year of 1909-10, by putting out the strongest football team in the history of the institution. During the entire season the team suffered not a single defeat; in fact they were scored on but once and one game resulted in a tie. Altho' no games were played with teams without the state, the results of those within the state showed that Montana's 1910 team compared very favorably with any in the Northwest. The season was closed by winning the state championship, and prospects are exceptionally bright for a championship team next year.

The basket ball season opened favorably. A good schedule was arranged and Mr. Whistler, of the Forest Service worked hard to turn out a good team but the men did not show up for practice and the schedule was abandoned. Three inter class games were played during the season and they resulted in the Juniors winning the class championship.

In spring athletics the student body decided not to put out a baseball team but to concentrate their efforts on track work. As a result about twenty-five candidates for track honors are training hard and Montana should be well represented in the coming meet. A meet was scheduled with Brigham Young University and one with the Utah Agricultural College but later both were called off on account of the fact that the Utah men were not subject to the twelve hour rule. This leaves but one track meet for the season, the state intercollegiate meet. An inter class meet was held and won by the Junior Class team, with the Freshmen second. The results of this meet showed that the material is in college and with a little more experience in the work the varsity will reclaim its former prestige in track work.

THE FOOTBALL SEASON

COACH WHITE,

Opening Game

Fort Shaw Indians vs. U. of M. 0-52

Montana won the opening game of the season from the Fort Shaw Indians by a score of 52 to 0. The Indians put up a game fight all the way thro' but were handicapped by being too light and inexperienced for the Varsity men. Our men played a loose game and were not in good condition, but the showing they made was as good as could be expected and the team improved greatly before leaving for the Butte same a week later.

CAPTAIN BISHOP.

'SLIM" MACLAY.

October 8th

M.S.S.M. vs. U. of M.

On October 8, the team played the Miners in Butte, the game resulting in a zero tie. The Miners were light but possessed good speed and team work, while the varsity men, due to over confidence, were poor in team work and played more as individuals, than as a team working together. Only once did either side have a chance to score. In the second half Montana was within eight vards of the Miners' goal but could not push the pigskin over. Ittner, Bishop and Ryan starred for the varsity while Jensen did the brunt of the work for the Miners.

October 22d

M.A.C. vs. U. of M.

The third game of the season was played with the Aggies in Bozeman. Montana showed great improvement since the School of Mines game but still had a few weak points. The two teams were evenly matched, the Aggies being heavier but not so experienced at the game. Most of the gains were made by line bucking and punting. In the last few minutes of play, Winstanley, Montana's left half, won the game for his team by making a place kick from the forty yard line. The Aggies were unable to score and the game resulted in a 3 to 0 victory for the Varsity.

EMMETT RYAN.

NED WINSTANLEY.

November 12th

M. S. S. M. vs. U. of M. 0-24

On November 12. Montana won the state championship by defeating the School of Mines by the decisive score of 24 to 0. The Miners had beaten the Aggies twice and the Varsity had defeated them once, so a close game was expected by everyone. Montana showed great improvement since the earlier games and the helping spirit, which is so essential to the success of any team, was made manifest throughout the game. The Miners put up a stubborn defense but could not withstand the attacks of the Varsity's tackles and back field. The gains were made mostly by forward passes and line bucks, Montana showing superiority in both. In the second half, Little, Montana's left end. made the most spectacular play of the game by catching a forward pass and running seventy vards for a touchdown. Ittner proved himself to be head and shoulders above any man on the field in line bucking and plunging. Bishop, Ryan, Maclay and Winstanley also played a star game for the Varsity, while Jensen, Cullity, and Osenburg were the strong men for the Miners.

November 25

M.A.C. vs. U. of M. 5-15

On Thanksgiving day Montana closed the season by defeating the Aggies, on the home grounds, by a decisive score of 15 to 5. This game, the hardest of the season, proved the superiority of the Varsity men and clinched their title to the state championship. The Aggies had the advantage of weight and a muddy field but lacked the snap and team work which was so characteristic of the Varsity men. Montana was scored on the first and only time during the season, when Poole, the Aggies' right end, received a passed ball and ran sixty yards for a touchdown. Both teams resorted to straight football and for a time seemed evenly matched but it was soon apparent that the Farmers were outclassed when by a series of line smashes and end runs. Ittner carried the ball over for the first touchdown. The Aggies were at no time during the rest of the game dangerous to the Varsity goal. The game resulted in a score of 15 to 5 in the Varsity's favor, Montana making the score on two touchdowns, two goal kicks and one drop kick. The stars for the Aggies were Poole, Brown and Tremper. Ittner proved himself to be the best man that ever represented Montana in football by his line smashing and wonderful defensive work. The other stars for the Varsity were Ryan, Maclay and Bishop.

AN APPRECIATION

I

When you are out on a midnight raid,
You stop at the Hall to serenade,
Thinking to please the inmates there,
It's late, but you don't give a care.
You sing your very latest song —
And wait for applause, but you wait long—
We're listening.

II.

"Wake up," you yell, "come on, be game," In disgust you turn—this is too tame, While inside, if you but knew, Our fingers ache to clap for you, But 'tis not proper, we have learned, So don't think we are unconcerned, We're listening.

W.-'11.

THE WRONG BROTHERS

Taylor (to Bullerdick out for track)—"Oh, you kid!" Bullerdick—"Abandon that phrase, young man."

Dr. Reynolds-"Mr. Marshall, give an illustration of words in series?"

Marshall—"The dark, cold, chilly, moonlight night."

Dr. Cox—"What are the college colors?" Chem. Freshie —"Cu, Ag, and Au."

E. Steele (seeing a model of the heart)—"Oh, hooray, that is just what I want."

First Junior Girl-"Those Sophs ought not pull them thro' that dirty water."

Second Junior Girl-"Oh, that poor little fellow on the end had yards of skin burned off his back."

Mr. Arthur in Zool. Lab.—"My, but this is a sporty place, look at the game."

Dana (in lecture on Hydraulies)—"Now, this is my head is fittere is a velocity of approach my head is increased. But that is nonsensical. Therefore there is no velocity of approach and my head is not increased. Now the velocity of approach gives me a second head which, added to my first head, will naturally change the size of my head."

Maude McC. (in French class)—"The only part of the story that I can understand is when the sweethearts take their girls the longest way home."

Professor in "Education"—"How many hours have you put on your studies?"

Edith S.—"I haven't put two hours on my education this year."

"THE GREAT FACULTY GAME."

This is the first year that the Engineers have been required to take Economics I., and it is very interesting to note how much good they derived from the course. The following is an example of the kind of notes they kept, and judging from this we can soon expect them to be authorities on taxation and tariff:

- According to old Togo. So ignorant farmers be With water all around them They wouldn't climb a tree.
- They send down to Congress Men who own the trusts,
 The tariff rises ten per cent
 The farmer always busts.

- But still they feed the nation, These foolish farmer chumps, They get it handed to them And they get it all in lumps.
- Now Mand and Eva notice How interested they seem, If a mouse should come into the room I don't believe they'd scream.
- Mason isn't getting bald Altho' his hair is scant
 Some of us will pass this Polycon And some few of us can't.
- Undy keeps on rambling On tariff, he is a whiz But we must look interested If we're on to our biz.
- Socialists aren't any good Anarchists are worse yet, Most of them came across the pond They crossed it when 'twas wet.
- Only ten more minutes
 And this hour will then be done
 My advice to Freshmen
 Economics always shun,
- Engineers are foolish
 To take this kind of junk
 But since we need our credits
 We can't afford to flunk.
- Just one more minute
 And the bell will have to ring
 Next hour is Mathematics
 There she goes, ting-a-ling.

COLLEGE MOTHER GOOSE

MOTHER GOOSE UP-TO-DATE

"Where are you going, my fair co-ed?"
"I am going strolling sir, she said;
"May I go with you, my pretty maid?"
"If you don't, 'tis your misfortune, sir,'' she said.

There was a man in our school
And he was a woeful shark;
He crammed into his dry old books
From daylight until dark.
And after he got his A. B. degree,
He studied with might and main;
And now he's almost to his grave,
For he's digging just the same.

Humpty Dumpty lived at the Hall; Humpty Dumpty went home to call; There all the King's cooks and chefs replete Couldn't give Humpty Dumpty enough to eat.

Dusty was a director,
Dusty made us perform;
Dusty went to a carpenter-shop
And built a big platform.

Somebody went to Dusty's Gym A little before the morn; Now Dusty is still guessing Where has the platform gone.

AND IT IS SOARING YET

Hickory Dickory, Dock.
The Press Club is selling their stock;
The price per is high,
But election is nigh.
Hickory Dickory, Dock.

AND ST. PATRICK'S DAY, TOO

Little Jack Horner Framed up a corner To send the baskets soaring high. He put in his thumb. But, poor fellow, got stung, For he bid more than he could buy.

AN ANNUAL TRIP

To varsity, to varsity,

To have a good time;

Home again, home again,

To flunk is no crime.

DID IT EVER OCCUR TO YOU

Little Miss Ruffit sat on a tuffet
Thinking of pranks to play;
For with rufhousing and needless carousing,
The Dean can't make her obey.

ANCIENT HISTORY

Hickory, Dickory, Dock.
The "studes" went up to the clock,
When Kessler went down
To visit the town:
Then what they did, was done up brown.
Hickory, Dickory, Dock.

Bish, Bish, the football man, Got the ball and away he ran. He made a score And then some more Oh, you Bish!

THE SAME OLD STORY

Simple Simon went a-fussing
With a fair co-ed;
Soon he had a case—which means—
Next year they're going to wed.

ARE YOU PRO OR CON?

If all the "studes" were regular digs,
And water was all they would drink,
And all the sprees were sorority teas,
What would the faculty think?

Meditation of a Junior about his Class

- Hugh keeps getting fatter A little every day, Little loves his Vivian In the same old way.
- Bullerdick grows taller
 What goes up must come down,
 Mike's hair is just as kinky
 As any in the town.
- Gleason looks so lonely Since Katy Woods has gone Eva still is Coffee And so the world goes on.
- Warren always wears a smile The smile that won't come off Slim is our football captain At our team they'll never scoff.
- 5. Bennett is taking literature In Math, we all are thro' Smith is Prexy of Engineers A booster thro' and thro'?

- 6. Charlie Hoffman likes the Dorm girls More than any that I know Reardon wears a derby And is so awfully slow
- Clarence Forbis plays at basketball And Harvey Spencer too.
 Simpson is our skater And quite a dancer too.
- 8. Willie Clanton doesn't dance Altho' we all know she can, If Hubert keeps on growing He soon will be a man.
- Annabelle's from the Bitter Root Where the sky is always blue, Ryan is our husky, And he is some athlete too.
- Mary Hansen has been here Longer than the rest, Gladys is so sympathetic Her good nature is at its best.

- 11. Isma is our frolic Her friend we call Joe; McCowan we still call "Stuffy", My but that name clings so.
- 12. Abbie never falls in love More sensible than the rest; To what class does Maud belong? Well, perhaps, she knows the best.
- 13. Edith is so true of heart As true as any Steele. Holmes has lost his credits For him we sorry feel.
- 14. Flo Catlin has quit growing We're glad her task is done, Ethel wears the reddest clothes Of any 'neath the sun.
- 15. The whole class of 1911 A pretty good class they seem; Of all the classes of the U. of M. They are the peaches and cream.

O, YOU JUNIOR

"What the Frats Spike on"

SIGMA NU-(Our boys and past glories!)-"We live on the edge of the campus! Our irresistible political cunning."

SIGMA CHI—"A high place in Missoula society. Our most highly honored and respected alumni. Best dressers in the varsity."—Cotter.

IOTA NU-Our exclusiveness, our country asylum (11/2 miles in the tall timbers). Our hopes (whatever they may be.)

KAPPA KAPPA GAMMA-"The shining lights in sorority life."

KAPPA ALPHA THETA-Scholastic attainments and good times.

SIGMA TAU GAMMA-No material except Seniors to "spike" on. They use dope.

Since Daisy is a Penman, And Bobby is a Line, No wonder they are intimate For the Penman draws the Line.

In Geology we must have our Rowe, In Math. we have to Plant, And some of us have to Carey, so much That pass we simply can't.

Solves a problem in the Fourth Dimension.

Dobson—"The lid always gets off in a dry town because the Fourth Dimension lets the spirits out."

The Editors confess that parts of this book are trivial and foolish, and they will not be offended if you laugh at it, Question:—What kind of a girl does Chisholm choose? A Mild-(red) one.

Waiting by the Office Door

Beside an oaken doorway, built up in days gone by, Behind whose walls the clouds of impartial justice lie, While streams the morning sunlight on quiet wood and lea, I stand and calmly wait until its hinges turn for me.

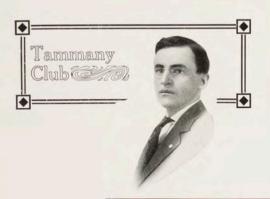

Behold the portal opens and over its threshold now, There steps a wearied Senior with pale and furrowed brow, His cup of trouble's full; his allotted time is come, Because a little song he'd sing and on the table drum.

> Once more the door is opened; a Freshman group go out, Their bright smile quenched forever, and stilled their joyous shout, Oh who will follow next, I sigh, As these poor infants pass me by.

> > There's some approach the threshold whose looks are blank with fear, And down the cheek of others there rolls a silent tear. As if they see in fancy the punishment they dread, Or hear the sudden footfalls near, that make their hopes seem dead.

> > > I mark their fear, their terror, yet these within my heart, Can neither rouse forebodings, nor my longing to depart, And in the silent hallway, beside the office door, I stand and calmly wait my turn, while o'er my books I pore.

"Sophomore" and "Harvard Cut" are two standard makes of clothes specially designed and styled for students who universally desire that distinctiveness and dash so becoming to them. The college boy looks "nifty", not because he spends more money for his clothes - but because he knows how to select them. In view of this fact, we have just secured two different lines, "Sophomore" and "Harvard Cut" clothes that are made for the sole purpose of satisfying the just demands of college students. Don't buy until you have seen our complete line of college clothes in the new models and latest patterns.
